Not illustrated. 1890 Excerpt: ...of the land should have desired to lay it out handsomely, with a view to attract city people to the country for homes, seemed to us so commendable that we were most happy in giving some Second, that the main drive in the part towards the railroad stations is in the nature of a 120 feet wide garden way. This handsome road will be occupied through the center with several grass plats each 40 feet wide by about 250 feet long, with some circles about 60 feet across, all tastefully embellished with shade trees, evergreens, flowering shrubs and hardy plants, mainly placed in irregular masses. On each side of the two 28 feet drives, shade trees will be irregularly arranged along the sidewalks, and to some extent into the fronts of the lots. In the third section this garden-way journal may adopt a similar plan in similar places, we leave this subject by urging all to consider the obvious advantages of the more natural principle of arranging even small gardens. A garden should be a most delightful spot, entirely apart from the kinds and character of its embellishments; it should be a place where the mind, tired with household or other occupations, will find rest and refreshment. Can it for a moment be doubted that the right-hand plan with the large variety that is afforded in the form of the borders, the interior beds, the bays and recesses, the vineries and the ample grass area, would afford these to a degree impossible to the more artificial form? Study the plan carefully as though on the ground, proceeding from plant to plant, from bed to bed, from part to part, and we think all can at once conclude as to the merits of the latter plan. From considering the improving of a town garden of a subscriber, we proceed to touch briefly upon the arrangement of a collection a...
