Cuatro viajes al oriente cubano (Spanish Edition) MAURICIO VICENT

Poco tiene que ver La Habana con el interior de Cuba y menos aún con el oriente del país, donde la vida fluye a otro ritmo y hasta la revolución tiene otra pasta, más perezosa y descarnada. En los campos y pueblos de Cuba está su verdadero corazón, la isla profunda, y estos cuatro viajes al interior son una experiencia iniciática en busca de esas esencias que a uno se le despistan cuando vive en La Habana. Entre la primera visita y la última hay 18 años, un buen plazo para que se sedimenten las sensaciones y hacer valoraciones. Los dos primeros viajes tuvieron lugar a mediados de los noventa. Eran los años duros del Periodo Especial, cuando la crisis provocada por la desaparición de la antigua Unión Soviética, con la que la isla realizaba el 70 % de sus intercambios, la dejó sin aliento. En el contexto de aquella primera travesía en un tren delirante a lo largo del país, con parada en las montañas centrales del Escambray, fue cuando por primera vez escuchamos el nombre de Baracoa. En medio de la crisis galopante, la segunda visita se centró en Guantánamo, la provincia más pobre de Cuba: allí, ante la falta de psicotrópicos en el hospital psiquiátrico se utilizaba entonces el electrochoque como tratamiento, aunque solo cuando había luz. Los dos últimos viajes, realizados en 2006 y 2011, nos devuelven de nuevo a Baracoa como lugar mágico que condensa todas las energías y contradicciones imaginables. La primera villa fundada en la isla por Diego Velázquez es el símbolo de todo un país.
